What Is The CCC - Commodity Credit Corporation - For half a century, the Commodity Credit Corporation has been agriculture's "bank" -- the Federal government's financing arm for an array of domestic and international farm programs. It has had an impact on every producer who has received price support payment or loan, on every organization that has received a commodity donation, and on every hunter or foreign government that has received a loan guarantee or line of credit for export sales. Here's a closer look at the CCC and how it operates.

The Commodity Credit Corporation is a government-owned and operated corporation created in 1933 to help stabilize and support farm prices and income, and to help maintain balanced supplies and the orderly distribution of agricultural commodities. Its operations for the Department of Agriculture include commodity price support and inventory management programs, donations and sales of government owned stocks for humanitarian or commercial uses, and foreign market development and export credit programs.

The Corporation is managed by an eight-member Board of Directors headed by the Secretary of Agriculture and appointed by the President. All members of the board, as well as the Corporation's 16 officers, are officials of the Department of Agriculture and its agencies.

The CCC has no operating personnel of its own. Its price support, storage and reserve programs, and its domestic acquisition and disposal activities for price support commodities are carried out entirely by the Agricultural Stabilization and Conservation Service through its Washington and field offices. Market development programs, foreign assistance, and export sales of most CCC-controlled stocks are handled by the Foreign Agricultural Service.

In addition, the Corporation's officers work with numerous other government agencies and private organizations to dispose of surplus commodities. The CCC uses customary private trade channels -- such as commercial banks, growers' organizations, cooperatives, warehouses, and exporters -- as much as possible to carry out its operations.

Normally, federal agencies receive an appropriation of funds at the beginning of each fiscal year, which they may then spend to carry out their programs. However, the CCC cannot operate this way because it is impossible to know in advance how much money will be needed for loans for payments to farmers or for other support activities.

Consequently, the CCC finances its programs primarily by borrowing money from the U.S. Treasury. Although its charter authorizes the Corporation to borrow up to $25 billion, the amount that may by outstanding at any one time is currently limited by statute to $20 billion. The CCC pays interest to the Treasury on the amount borrowed and, in turn, sets interest rates on its loans to producers and others based on what it is charged by the Treasury.

Receipts from sales of commodities, loan repayments, and interest payments on loans are also used to finance CCC programs.

The CCC maintains a checking account with the Treasury that is used for making payments and depositing receipts of funds. Federal Reserve Banks act as agents for the Corporation in handling these transactions. Briefly, here's how the system works:

ASCS county offices make price support loans or payments to farmers by issuing sight drafts, or checks, payable on behalf of the CCC. When farmers repay their loans, county offices send the funds to a Federal Reserve Bank for deposit to the Corporation's account. Each day, Federal Reserve Banks report the total amount of deposits and payments they have made for the CCC to ASCS' Fiscal Division, which keeps a daily tally of the CCC's financial position.

The Corporation's account with the Treasury is, in effect, a "revolving fund." All receipts are credited daily to the CCC's account, reducing its debt to the Treasury and replenishing its borrowing authority. The CCC may reuse this money as soon as it is credited to the Corporation's account.

By agreement with the Treasury, the CCC maintains a minimum balance of $1 million in the account. Each day the Corporation eithers borrows funds to deposit in the account if the balance falls below $1 million, or takes funds out of the account and repays its borrowings if the balance rises above $2 million.

Each year the CCC submits a profit and loss statement of its activities to the Congress, which appropriates funds to reimburse the Corporation for program costs and losses incurred in prior years. The reimbursements are used to repay loans from the Treasury, thereby restoring the CCC's borrowing authority.

Area Cattlemen marketed 1229 steers and 427 heifers in a special graded sale in Lynchburg last Thursday.

Steers weighed 674 pounds and averag e d $64.76. The top pen brought $72.25. Heifers are still a weak commodity. The high pen went for $58.75. The heifers weighed 587 pounds and averaged $55.88.

There's simply no way to make money selling heifers at these prices. Steer prices up from last fall and most consignors appeared to be satisfied.

There were four sales last week in Virginia. Steers averaged $65.64 and heifers averag e d $55.04.

There will be no Daethal, a popular lawn and garden herbicide, manufactured in 1982. Extensive damage occurred to the plant last fall; so the only material available for use this year will be carry over stock from 1981.

The Company (Diamond Shamrock Corp.) indicates that capital funds for building a $20 million plant have been approved. Construction should begin early in this calendar year.

Temik 15G has been granted a state 24C label in Virginia for the control of the green peach aphid and flea beetle suspression on flue-cured tobacco.

Having the proper equipment for applying Temik is essential. The formulation is similar to Furadan, but the application rate is one-third to one-ninth the rate of Furadan.

Protective clothing should always be worn when Temik is handled.

We anticipate getting some parasitized Cereal Leaf Beetle Larvae to distribute during the period May 24 - 28. Even though we plan for these releases, they don't always come through. Two years ago they were not available. In 1981 through a communication breakdown, we failed to get a supply. So we are trying to again.

Collections have been made in succeeding years and we have established the parasite at several locations in the county.

There are four 1982 All-America Rose selections for you to consider this year:

Brandy--an apricot hybrid tea; French Lace--an ivory floribunda; Mon Cheri--a red blend hybrid tea; Shreveport--an orange-blend grandiflora.

More gardeners are buying container grown roses because the shock of transplanting is minimized.

Prepare a good hole--usually one 12 inches deep and 18 inches in diameter is adequate. Loosen the soil in the bottom and add some decomposed organic matter to the hold. Slit the container sides. fold them back and plant bucket (if it is the new biodegradable) and plant. Plant should be set at same level it had previously grown.

Until now we have never recommended sweet cherries for Virginia. An eight year study at Winchester suggests that we can produce sweet cherries.

The most promising varieties that are consistant producers and resist cracking are: Hedelfingen, Viva, Valera, Venus and Hardy Giant. Maturity ranges from June 10 (Viva) and July 5 (Hedelfinger).

Be sure that you are purchasing virus free trees. Your nurseryman can tell you.

Fall tests on broccoli and cauliflower at Virginia Tech show the following varieties with the highest quality: Broccoli-Bonanza Hybrid and Premium Crop Hybrid Cauliflower--Snow Crown Hybrid, White Contessa and Stovepipe.

Seed for these crops were sowed June 20 and transplanted August 5. The field tested medium for p and k, but 1000 pounds of 10-10-10 was applied and sidedressed with 15 pounds of nitrogen three weeks after transplanting and again in two weeks.

And they said, "the Lord hath need of him." St. Luke 19, 34 verse.

The prayer service was led by Deacons Willie Ward and James Moore. Everyone joined in the prayer service.

The regular preaching service was held at the Alabama Baptist Church. Our pastor, the Rev. C. L. Elliott was in charge. Guest minister was the Rev. H. O. Flood. The scripture, read by the Rev. Flood, was taken from the 17th chapter of St. John.

Music for the service was performed by the Combined Choir. We welcome all our friends from different churches, including Triumph, Mt. Zion, Mt. Lyle, White Oak Grove, Zion Baptist, and New Store. A splendid message was delivered by our pastor, "Jesus Coming to Jerusalem."

We are praying for the sick and shut-in.

Easter Sunday at 7 p.m. in the Alabama Baptist Church there will be a program featuring the Holiness Gospel Singers, the Gospel Travelers, the Gospel Harmonettes, and the Gospel Quintet. You are invited to attend.

On Saturday, April 17, at 7 p.m., at White Oak Grove Baptist Church in Phenix there will be a musical program consisting of performances by the Holiness Gospel Singers, the Gospel Crowns, the Heavenly Gospel, the Echoes of Glory, and the Gospel Travelers. Dinner will be served to everyone. May God bless you.

Service set

Open Communion Services will be held at Salem United Methodist Church in Spout Spring on Good Friday, April 9, from 3 p.m. to 6 p.m.

Later, at 7:30 p.m., the Rev. Sam McGee will deliver an Easter message.

The public is cordially invited to attend.

Cake classes set

Cake decorating classes will be taught in Brookneal and Rustburg beginning later this month. To register, call the Campbell County Recreation Department no later than April 14.

Mt. Pleasant

It was a windy weekend, but not too windy for the Little Tots Choir, who journeyed to White Oak Grove Sunday for the 9 a.m. service. They met their pastor there. The Rev. Napier brought a wonderful message, from "100 Songs Praising God."

Pulpit guests included the Revs. Flood, Edward, Humbles, Wyatt and William Venable. The congregation enjoyed the choir's performance, aided by Mrs. Rosa Edwards, Gertrude Wesley, and Barbara Wynn at the piano. They were accompanied by Mrs. Gracie Walker and Odell Chambers.

The Rev. Ernest Humbles brought the morning message, a wonderful one, titled "Who is Your Doctor?" The Young Adult Choir provided music, along with the Rev. and Mrs. Napier. That afternoon, they conducted services at the Mt. Zion Church in Concord.

At 4 p.m. the Rev. Tim Lawing and the Junior Choir were at Mt. Pleasant speaking for the Deaconesses Board. He delivered a splendid message, "Meeting the unexpected Jesus." The Rev. R. Q. Lawing came along. He gave great encouragement to the Deaconesses and the church as a whole. It had been a while since he had been down, but everyone was glad to see him. A service will be conducted Saturday at 3 p.m., the Echoes of Glory will be in concert.
